Women are among the fastest growing criminal justice population. The reasons for their involvement are as varied as their pathways into and contact with the system.

A consistent thread throughout the lives of justice-involved women is trauma resulting from domestic, sexual or other types of violence. Throughout their lives, justice-involved women may encounter various criminal justice practitioners and service providers assisting them prior to, during, or after incarceration.

This webinar will include a discussion of: gender-specific issues that present reentry challenges for justice-involved women; the importance of collaboration in the reentry process; and available resources.
